ALL A JOCKEY CAN DO.

That Sloan has good hands and is a judge of pace has been exemplified more than once; but possibly one of the secrets of his success, which would at a pinch serve him well, is the way in which he finishes. Nothing can be more absurd than the invariable, but utterly useless practice of swinging the hands round in a circle, either from left to right or vice versa, when finishing; and we should extremely like to hear any jockey explain what possible advantage can arise from this gymnastic exercise. If it means anything at all, it is simply a superfine method of "jobbing" the horse in the mouth; for it is quite certain that the circular motion can neither ease nor steady a horse, nor add to his pace. In a race of a mile, or anything over it, the majority of horses need restraining, so that they should not run themselves out at the start; and by restraining the horse the stride is shortened. The only possible use of moving the hands at all at the finish is that, instead of shortening the horse's stride by constant pressure on the reins, he shall be allowed to extend himself, and to this end the hands should be moved backward and forward with the stride of the horse, so that, while a firm hold shall be kept of his head, he shall not change his legs, nor shall the rider check the horse in his stride. Ever since the time when the Chiffney rush was invented we have read over and over again about brilliant finishes, and of the jockey absolutely lifting his horse past the post, or doing all sorts of other wonderful things; while the more he swung his arms about the more he was supposed to do for his horse. Now, it is quite certain that no jockey in the world can make a horse go faster than his best pace, any more than can a man get into a bucket and lift himself by the handle. The utmost, it appears to us, that the finest horseman in the world can accomplish is to do nothing which will in the least interfere with the horse's stride or action; and this is exactly what Sloan does. With him there is no circular arm swinging; he simply yields to the stride of his horse in the manner we have mentioned just above, and suggested as the correct one many years ago, long before either Sloan or Simms came over here to ride. The disposition of weight is not one that can be settled off hand; and no useful purpose would be served by theorizing upon it. Of course, everybody knows that the primary duty of the fore legs is to sustain the weight, while the hind legs have to act as propellers; but possibly in this, as in other matters, the truth will be found midway between two extremes, as there must be a limit to the distance forward at which the weight should be carried. Where that point is can only be ascertained after experiment; though to obtain the very best results it would probably differ with each particular horse bestridden. It appears to us that Sloan, so far from adding to the mystery of race riding, has really simplified it by showing that a good deal of the nonsense which has been talked or written about it has really no foundation in fact. That it is an easy matter to ride a race no one for a moment supposes. On the other hand, to incline to the idea that a boy who before the days of board schools could hardly read or write should, directly he found himself in the saddle, show himself possessed of all sorts of gifts, is unreasonable. Sloan has shown—at any rate, to a certain extent—that sitting still, avoiding all useless show, and not waiting, are at least valuable factors in race riding. There is no reason to say that he has had absolutely picked mounts; but, at the same time, the American could not win on every horse he rode. He was beaten by Loates at Newmarket yesterday week, nor could he on Tuesday at Nottingham succeed in taking either of his three mounts first past the post. It may be that he has had an extraordinary run of luck, or it may be that there is something in the system of riding which gives him an advantage. There is one thing to be said, viz., that not one single word has ever been breathed as to any unfairness in his riding; and that being the case, he is entitled to full praise for his victories. It would be equally unjust and ungenerous to deny him the full credit for what he has accomplished, for it is not sportsman-like to attempt to explain away a defeat; but another week may tell an altogether different story, and the horseman who has during his visit here proved such a thorn in the side of our English jockeys may often have to ride a stern race. Probably when the season is over the general idea will be that Sloan has not revolutionized race riding, except so far as he has shown the advantage of sitting still and the uselessness of arm-flourishing at the finish.—The Field, London, England.

Says: "It is quite probable that a running meeting will be given at Columbus, O., next spring, and Colonel W. E. Applegate will be its conductor. For some time past a running meeting has been agitated among the business men of Columbus and Colonel Applegate has been consulted and asked to manage such an event next spring. Colonel Applegate said yesterday that a meet at Columbus some time next spring is almost a certainty."

J. K. Redmon has bought Lord Zeni from Will Wallace. He will give the horse a good, long rest in the hope that he may be able to bring him out next year in something like his form of 1897.

Morgan Chinn is making quite a reputation as a starter at Latonia and it is said that he will be an applicant for the position of starter on the Jockey Club tracks next year.

Winner—Br. f, by Pirate of Penzance—Dawn of Day.

Post 20 minutes. Start good. The first two were driving hard. Dawn carried Topper wide and into the lumpy going on the stretch turn. The latter was rank and Southard had all he could do to control him. Fanfaronade was virtually left at the post on account of lack of alertness on the part of his rider. Winner—Ch. c, by Strathmore—Gladness.
Post 3 minutes. Start straggling. Won easily; the next three driving hard. Donald Bain was many pounds the best. He disheartened the others early with the pace he set. Parrakeet's race entitles him to consideration among good horses. Harry Preston was none too well ridden. He showed plenty of speed. Red Pirate was waited with too long. Winner—B. f, by Argyle—Peradventure.
Post 3 minutes. Start good. The first three were in a hard drive. Alleviate came with a great burst of speed in the stretch and Fireside did not have enough left to stall off her rush. What Next tired badly in the last sixteenth. Sauber showed little of his recent speed. He seems to have gone back or could not concede the weight.
Alleviate, place, even. Fireside, place, 4 to 5.

9223 FOURTH RACE—1 Mile. Purse $300. 3-year-olds and upward. Selling.
